

I (Abby Klein) believe that the water industry is one of the most important jobs in the United States because we use water in almost everything we do such as taking our showers that we all love to take, watering our lawns to keep them nice and green except for the unexpected year we had last year where no matter how hard to water them nothing would stay alive. Using water to cook those delicious homemade meals that grandma or mom makes for you when you go to their house. Every job has some sort of water involved, weather that is the dental hygienist squirting water in your mouth after they just got done putting the special paste on your teeth, the farmer putting water in his or her sprayer to go spray the crop so we are able to eat. The lunch ladies at the schools who use water to make our food. The mom/dad or yourself who washes clothes so we can wear them again also uses a lot of water. The place where we like to go cool off in the summer, the swimming pool also uses a lot of water because they are constantly making sure that the water level is at the correct height it needs to be at. What would we do if we didn't have the people who work for the city that are constantly making sure that we have water? The restaurants would not be able to be open because they wouldn't be able to wash their dishes, have the water to boil the spaghetti noodles, shrimp and so much more. We wouldn't be able to make our lawns nice and green by watering our lawns because there would be no water. We wouldn't be able to utilize our swimming pool because they wouldn't be able to fill it up. For drinking water we would have to go back to "hunting" for water in a creek or pond and then have to boil the water on the stove, we wouldn't be able to have our fancy fridges with water dispensers because it makes water for us, we would only be able to wash clothes for a certain amount of time, we wouldn't be able to take showers when we wanted to, the farmers wouldn't be able to spray their crops because they wouldn't have enough water I think that is one of the most forgotten jobs in America is the people who make our water because most people just see a water tower and think

“oh that’s where we get our water from.” No, there is a lot more going on behind the scenes that you may or may not know about. Such as them making sure they have the right amount of chemicals added to treat the water, making sure all the levels are right, making sure everything is running smoothly, making sure there is no leaks in anything, making sure there is no rust in the water and so much more
